STANDING COMMITTEE ON THE LAW OF TRADEMARKS, INDUSTRIAL DESIGNS AND GEOGRAPHICAL INDICATIONS

Fourteenth Session
Geneva, April 18 to 22, 2005

SUMMARY OF REPLIES TO THE QUESTIONNAIRE
ON TRADEMARK LAW AND PRACTICE (SCT/11/6)

Document prepared by the Secretariat

1. At its eighth session, held in Geneva from May 27 to 31, 2002, the Standing Committee on the Law of Trademarks, Industrial Designs and Geographical Indications (SCT) considered issues relating to harmonization of substantive trademark law. The exchange of views that took place at that session was based on document SCT/8/3, which provided a preliminary indication of topics regarding substantive harmonization of trademark laws. Pursuant to a request of the SCT made at the conclusion of its eighth session, the Secretariat prepared a draft questionnaire on trademark law and practice (document SCT/9/3), for discussion at the ninth session which was held from November 11 to 15, 2002. At that session, the SCT decided that the International Bureau should circulate the draft questionnaire on the SCT Electronic Forum, inviting SCT members to provide comments by the end of January 2003. At the tenth session of the SCT (April 28 to May 2, 2003), the Secretariat was asked to revise and finalize the questionnaire as contained in document SCT/10/3 Prov. on the basis of the comments thus far received, and to circulate it for reply. The resulting final version of the questionnaire was issued as document SCT/11/6 and circulated on August 15, 2003, with a request for return by December 30, 2003.

2. The Secretariat has received replies from the following Member States: Algeria, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Belarus, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Croatia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Dominica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Estonia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Hungary, Iran (Islamic Republic of), Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kyrgyzstan, Lithuania, Madagascar, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Morocco, New Zealand, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States of America, Uruguay and Zambia (72). The following intergovernmental organizations also replied to the questionnaire: the Benelux Trademark Office (BBM), the European Communities (EC) and the African Intellectual Property Organization (OAPI) (3). Furthermore, replies to the questionnaire were received from a number of private organizations.

3. The questionnaire contained 369 questions on the trademark laws and administrative office practices of Member States. In respect of 251 questions a response was requested by checking the relevant box (YES / NO / N/A). The responses to the remaining 118 questions were requested in the form of a written explanation. The Secretariat compiled all the responses into the present summary document.

4. In the course of the preparation of this document the Secretariat examined some 22,000 responses received in five official languages (Arabic, English, French, Russian and Spanish). Out of those 22,000 replies, 17,821 correspond to the 251 questions in document SCT/11/6 to which a response had to be given by checking the relevant box (YES/ NO/ N/A). Those replies are reproduced completely in the present document in the form of tables. Some 4,200 replies relate to the 118 questions in document SCT/11/6 to which the response had to be textual. This document does not attempt to reproduce exactly all responses that were given in the text, but rather identifies general trends in respect of those replies. For the purpose of easy reading and understanding, the questions that require textual response are reproduced followed by a summary of replies received by the Secretariat under each table.

5. It should be noted that the structure of the present document follows the structure of document SCT/11/6, and that the same numeration is applied. Furthermore, the format in which the replies are reproduced was chosen with a view to allowing the addition of further replies in case Member States wish to submit their replies at a later stage.

IMPORTANT NOTE

6. The information reproduced in this document was compiled on the basis of the replies which the Secretariat has received to the questionnaire contained in document SCT/11/6. They constitute information made available by participating States and organizations only for the purposes of identifying issues which could be addressed at the international level for the future development of international trademark law. The information contained in this document should not be taken to constitute a legally binding source of the applicable law in the States and organizations mentioned in this document, or as guidance to the interpretation of such laws.

Please explain:

Some replies mentioned sound marks, smell marks and holograms. In other replies signs indicating existence of intellectual property rights, e.g., “registered as being excluded from registration” were excluded from registration. Also some terms such as “olympic”, “national”, special protected emblems such as “royal crown”, national governmental emblems, emblems of other States and of intergovernmental organizations, as well as the olympic symbols and the emblem of the Red Cross, were excluded from registration. In a small number of replies it was indicated that three-dimensional marks and combinations of colors could not be registered as marks. Finally a number of respondents stated that marks of a functional nature could not be registered.

3. Are any specific signs excluded from the registration on the basis of the case law in your jurisdiction?

Some replies mentioned olfactory trademarks, which could not be represented graphically. One reply indicated that famous marks recognized as such by court decisions, could not be registered by third parties.

A. If YES, please explain if there are any special registration requirements (such as translation):

The requirement of a translation of a trademark that consisted of words in foreign languages was mentioned in 37 replies. Many replies indicated that even if a translation was not required it was recommended. One reply stated that an application for a mark in a foreign language should be combined with the authorization for export of the goods concerned.

B. If YES, please explain if there are any special registration requirements (such as transliteration request):

The requirement of a transliteration of a trademark that consisted of words in foreign script was mentioned in 30 replies. Even though a transliteration was not required it was generally recommended. Some replies pointed out that if a mark was registered without a transliteration or a translation being presented, it was considered as a figurative mark.

D. If YES, please explain if there are any special registration requirements:

In the majority of the replies it was stated that consent from the famous person was required. Some replies pointed out that the registration of names of religious, tribal or political figures were against public order. Historical or cultural figures could not be registered in some countries (such as Beethoven or Mozart for CDs in class 9 of the Nice classification).

E. If YES, please explain if there are any special registration requirements:

Most of the replies emphasized that a mark had to be distinctive. The general approach was that single letter or two-letter combinations, which were not presented in a distinctive way, were not registrable. However, evidence of use might make them registrable. Also, disclaimers might be required in respect of non-distinctive elements of the mark.

F. If YES, please explain if there are any special registration requirements:

See replies to the question 1.E.

G. If YES, please explain if there are any special registration requirements:

See replies to the question 1.E. One reply pointed out that punctuation marks were registrable as position marks. Such marks might be figurative or three-dimensional and they had to comply with the corresponding registration requirements. Also a description of the position of the sign should be submitted.

B. If YES, please explain what are the applicable legal and administrative requirements:

Graphic representation, such as drawings, views or photographs showing each feature, was generally required. As endorsement on the registration a description of a trademark might be required. In one reply it was stated that a three-dimensional mark might comprise other elements such as figurative or word elements, colors or labels. This was referred to as “get up” but not as “trademark”. The distinctiveness of such composite signs would be considered for the mark as a whole.

D. If YES, please list them and explain how they are represented graphically in the application and explain if there are any technical requirements:

Most replies indicated that a mark had to be distinctive and capable of being represented graphically. According to the case law in one country the form which characterizes a service could also be registered as a mark. Some pointed out that shapes unrelated to the product (e.g. the Mercedes star), the shape of the product itself, the shape of the packaging of the goods (containers, bottles) might be registrable.

The replies listed, among others, the shape that gave substantial value to the goods, shapes contrary to morality or public order, shapes not capable of distinguishing and the common or usual shape of a product or a packaging.

F. If YES, please explain by which means the distinctive character could be proved (filing evidence of use, opinion surveys etc.):

A few replies pointed out that evidence of acquired distinctiveness could overcome an objection of devoid of distinctive character but not an objection referred to in questions E(i) to (iii). Some stated that all kinds of evidence might be taken into consideration, among others, invoices, delivery slips, order slips, bills, receipts, account books, pamphlets, printed matters (newspaper clippings, magazines, catalogues, leaflets) carrying advertisement, publicity, photograph showing the use of a trademark, a certificate issued by an advertisement agency, broadcasting agency, publisher or printer, certificate issued by a trade association or fellow traders, a certificate issued by a customer of goods or services or an agent, a certificate issued by a consumer, a certificate issued by a public organization (government authorities, local public bodies, foreign embassy, a chamber of commerce and industry). Generally distinctive character and evidence of use might be proven if sufficient evidence was provided, i.e., opinion surveys. One reply pointed out that if a three-dimensional mark was treated as product packaging it might be protected as inherently distinctive without proof of acquired distinctiveness. In the case it was a product shape, then it could only be protected upon proof that it had acquired distinctiveness through use.

If YES, what are the criteria to determine the distinctive character of the shape of a product?

Many replies indicated that the affected trade circles must consider the shape as such as an indication of the origin and the shape as such must have the required degree of recognition. The results of opinion surveys played an important role in determining whether a mark had become distinctive.

A. If YES, please explain how the color or combination of colors are represented in the application:

Where a color or colors were claimed as element(s) of a trademark, most replies indicated that an application must include a description in words of the color(s) concerned. It must also include a representation of the mark in the particular color(s) claimed. Applicant might define color(s) using any recognized color matching system. Some replies stated that color alone marks might be registered as long as they were defined by a given form or in association with other signs. Proof that a sign had acquired a distinctive character through use was generally demanded. A few replies referred to a court decision, according to which color alone marks must be described by reference to an international color code (e.g., PANTONE®).

B(ii) If YES, please list them and explain how they are represented in the application, whether graphically or by other means:

The majority said that a sound had to be represented graphically, such as musical notations or words. Cassettes and CDs might also be provided. In one reply low of a cow and sound of an automobile horn were mentioned, provided that these sounds had distinctive features. The application must, in that case, include the characteristics of sound or the diagram of frequencies, with the soundtrack registered on an audiocassette.

C. If YES, explain how they are represented in the application, whether graphically or by other means:

Many replies indicated that the offices had not yet received any applications containing olfactory marks but, in principle, olfactory marks had to be represented graphically and contain a description of the composition and elements. However, many replies stated that for the time being, no means of satisfactory graphical presentation existed. A few replies mentioned a court decision according to which a chemical formula, description in words, deposit or a combination of them was all held to be insufficient.

D. If YES, explain how they are represented in the application, whether graphically or by other means:

Most replies indicated that the different views of the representation of a mark might be represented graphically. It was explained that taking a photocopy of a hologram would reveal the selection of pictures contained in a hologram. A hologram could therefore be represented graphically by a photocopy. Some replies stated that a selection of pictures revealing the whole of the holographic effect was required, and also an additional explanation of the effect in plain words.

F. If YES, please explain if there are any special requirements:

Registration was generally allowed if an authorization to register, granted by the owner of the rights over the title, was presented. In many replies it was emphasized that the movie/book titles should not be against good manners.

G. If YES, please explain how they are represented graphically:

Some replies specified that all the stills that made up the multimedia effect, or a selection of samples sufficient to fully represent or reveal the distinctiveness of the multimedia effect, and an additional explanation of the effect in plain words must be submitted. It was generally required that an applicant file a sample of the full motion effect/multimedia sign on a digital data carrier in a data format chosen/accepted by the office, typically on a CD-ROM or a DVD.

H. If YES, please list them and explain how they are represented graphically, such as position marks:

One reply indicated that one touch mark had been accepted in embossed printing (braille). In another reply taste marks were mentioned, specified by written descriptions. In a third reply light signs were indicated. In that case an application had to include the characteristics of light symbols or signals, their sequence, duration of the luminescence and other features.

I. If NO, please explain:

In one reply it was explained that sound marks were examined by a single examiner and in another reply that special examiners examined color and scent marks.

J. If YES, please explain what kind of training:

Internal training at the office and WIPO's training sessions were mentioned.

A. If YES, please explain how they are defined and specify any special requirements:

According to some replies national laws stipulated defensive marks while others stated that they were recognized by the office practices. There was a wide divergence as regards the definitions and requirements.

B. If YES, please explain how they are defined and specify any special requirements:

See the reply to question 5A.

C. If YES, please explain how they are defined and specify any special requirements:

In many replies series of marks were defined as a number of trade marks which resembled each other as to their material particulars and differed only as to matters of a non-distinctive character not substantially affecting the identity of the trademark. In some replies were mentioned requirements, such as one applicant, one receiving date, and one leading class.

D. If YES, please explain how they are defined and the particular requirements (such as regulations for use or minimum content of regulations):

On the basis of the replies, it appeared that there existed two types of collective marks, namely association marks and certification marks. Sometimes a collective mark was the same as an association mark, a specific sign which belongs to an association of enterprises and which was used or intended to be used by its members for goods and services. Generally the regulations for use were required and the list of names of the persons authorized to use the mark. Also the statutes and possible sanctions in case of an unauthorized use were demanded. The collective marks were examined on the same basis as regular trademarks, e.g., they had to be capable of distinguishing. As regards certification marks, see the reply to question 5E.

E. If YES, please explain how they are defined and the particular requirements (such as regulations for use or minimum content of regulations):

Most replies indicated that certification marks were those used to attest that a product or service complied with established standards or specifications, particularly regarding its quality, material used and methodology employed. The characteristics of the product or service to be certified and the control measures to be adopted by the owner of the mark must be presented. Regulations for use were required. According to one reply certification marks indicated regional or other origin, material, mode of manufacture, quality, accuracy, or other characteristic or that a member of a union or other organization performed the work or labor on the goods/services. Certification marks were not used by the owner of the mark but by third parties.

F. If YES, please explain how they are defined and the particular requirements (such as regulations for use or minimum content of regulations):

See the reply to the question 5E.

G. If YES, please explain which types of marks:

Appellations of origin, commercial names and emblems were mentioned.

1. If YES, when does the protection start?

Out of the few replies that confirmed that an application must be based on use, two said that protection would start from the filing date of an application, one said that protection would start from the date of registration of a mark and another one said that the domestic law did not provide for any special requirements in this regard.

3. If YES, what are the requirements?

The majority said that a declaration/statement of actual use or intent to use was required at the time of filing an application or, in one case specifically, within three years from that date. It was specified that applications must be based on a good faith intention to use the mark in commerce in respect of the goods/services covered by the registration, or used in connection with the applicant's business.

6. If YES, please explain:

The general approach was that in case of two or more similar marks, a prior right would be given to a mark first used in commerce. However, some replies pointed out that this right would only be granted if the mark had been used for at least three or six months. Usually a prior right would be ensured by means of opposition, or through considering the well-known marks. One reply stated that prior rights served only as evidence in court actions.

7. If YES, please explain if the time limit is stipulated by a statute or if it depends on the nature of the action, and how long the time limit is:

Time limits varied from 15 days to 18 months from the date of deposit of an application or, in one specific case, from the date of its publication. Time limits were usually stipulated by national or administrative statutes or laws and applied with regard to formal and/or substantive examination of a mark.

10. If YES, what are the benefits for the administration and are there any problems arising from its implementation?

The majority of replies indicated that electronic filing accelerated, facilitated and made the procedure efficient by reducing administration costs and enabling offices to check formalities automatically. It was also said that the system was user-friendly as it provided database search functions. One reply mentioned that almost half of the applications were filed electronically. Although no significant problems were reported, one reply stated that users found the system less accessible and electronic payment of fees problematic. Another reply pointed out the lack of a fully secured system, specifying that all applications currently filed by electronic means must be followed by the original in paper. However, secured electronic filing with electronic/digital signature would be available in the future.

11. If YES, please explain what the requirements are:

The majority said that an applicant might request the recording of the assignment of an application by presenting the deed of assignment (or its certified copy) and through payment of the prescribed fees (if any). Some required a request be made in a specific form. Others mentioned that a request must indicate all the details of an application, the signatures of the parties, a statement that the mark was in use, and the goods/services being assigned.

12. If YES, does the modification have an effect on the filing date or on the protection of the mark?

Some replies indicated that changes concerning only secondary aspects of an application (spelling errors, obvious mistakes, etc.) did not alter its filing date. On the other hand, changes affecting the essence of a mark or the scope of protection of an application (i.e., extension of the list of goods/services) were not permitted. However, others said that modifications did not affect at all the filing date or the protection of a mark. Finally, it was said that if a mark was replaced or essentially modified, the filing date would be that on which the change was made and, in some cases, the application would have to be republished.

B. If YES, what are the legal effects of the publication?

Most replies indicated that the publication of an application marked the beginning of the time limit during which oppositions or observations might be filed. In one reply it was pointed out that an applicant was very restricted in amending the application in any way. Even if there were errors in an application which were applicant's or attorney's fault, these could not be corrected if they had the effect of extending the rights deriving from the application or substantially affecting its identity.

Q. Others:

In one reply it was indicated that a sign should not be granted protection if its registration was applied in bad faith. Also a sign should not be granted protection if it consisted of symbols having close relation to religious or any other beliefs. Plant variety names and International Nonproprietary Names (INNs) for Pharmaceutical Substances were also mentioned as absolute grounds for refusal. In one reply were listed trademarks which consisted solely of a mark indicating, in a common way, a commonplace surname or name of a legal entity, trademarks comprising a sign which was identical with, or similar to, a prize awarded at an exhibition held by the government or a local public entity or at one which was not held by the government, but had been designated by the Commissioner of the patent office or at an international exhibition held in a foreign country by its government or a person authorized thereby and trademarks which are identical with, or similar to, a famous mark indicating a non-profit public entity of public service.

R(i) If YES, please explain the practical consequences:

Most replies stated that examiners followed thoroughly established judicial and administrative precedents and understandings in order to support their own decisions.

R(ii) If YES, please explain the practical consequences:

Most replies indicated that examiners needed to consider precedents when making decisions. Consistency was considered desirable but might not always be appropriate. In order to support decisions, examiners followed decisions of other examiners, when such decisions were based on well-established understandings.

Among others were mentioned composition marks, tradenames, design patents and the names and representations of historical monuments. In one reply the following was listed: designations or initials of public entities or agencies, where registration was not required by the public entity or agency; names, prizes or symbols of official or officially recognized sporting, artistic, cultural, social, political, economic or technical events or imitations likely to cause confusion, except when authorized by the competent authority or entity promoting the event; reproductions or imitations of titles, bonds, coins or bank notes of a Union, State, Federal District, Territory, Municipality or any country; signs that imitated or reproduced, in the whole or part, a mark which the applicant could not fail to have knowledge of in view of his activities and of which the owner was established or domiciled on the national territory, if the mark was intended to distinguish a product or service that was identical, similar or related, and likely to cause confusion or association with the mark of such other person; the name and signs of sport entities, and the name or nickname of athletes.

Another reply indicated the following as relative grounds for refusal: trademarks containing the portrait of another person or the name, famous pseudonym, professional name or pen name of another person or the famous abbreviation thereof (except where the consent of the person concerned had been obtained); trademarks which were identical with another person's registered defensive mark, and which were used on the designated goods or designated services covered by the defensive mark registration; trademarks which were identical with another person's trademark where one year had not elapsed since the date of extinguishment of the trademark right, or with a trademark similar to such a trademark, and which were used in respect of the designated goods or designated services covered by the trademark right or in respect of similar goods or services.

P(i) If YES, please list them:

Most replies were very general stating that marks consisting wholly of a sign ordinarily used to indicate the kind, quality, quantity, intended purpose, value, geographical origin, or other characteristic of goods or services, or the time of production of goods or rendering of services, would be registered only with proof of acquired distinctiveness. However, in one reply it was indicated that marks consisting of a single color and marks consisting only of numbers were registrable only with proof of acquired distinctiveness.

P(i) If YES, what are the criteria to prove the acquired distinctiveness:

Many replies emphasized that the public should recognize the sign as a mark of an enterprise but there were many ways to prove the acquired distinctiveness, such as results of opinion surveys. According to some replies evidence must show that the mark distinguished the goods or services at the date of application for registration. In one reply were mentioned exclusive and continuous use for five years and ownership of registration of the same mark for related goods/services and/or evidence showing a distinctiveness perception by the public.

D. If YES, explain how and when:

In most cases, if a registration was challenged on the basis of non-use of the mark, proof of its genuine use must be provided. Some replies specified that the proof of use could be in the form of a declaration to be presented at the time of renewal (or, in one reply specifically, one year from that). In another reply it was stated that for a registration to remain valid, an affidavit of use must be filed and use be substantiated by verifying in the affidavit that the mark was in use in commerce for the goods/services recited in the registration.

A. If YES, please give definition:

More than half of the replies pointed out that a mark must be affixed on goods for which it had been registered (in some cases, even second hand goods), for instance, on the packaging thereof, exhibits, sales, signs, business documents, official forms, labels, price lists, advertisements, published works, importing/exporting purposes, etc. Others defined the expression “required use” as the use of a mark in a printed or other visible representation and/or evidences upon which the registrar could rely (i.e., tax payment documentation). A few others added that use must be genuine and serious.

B(i) If YES, please explain:

The majority of the replies stated that the act of displaying or distributing advertisements, publications, official forms (letterheads) and signboards displaying exhibits in exhibitions and fairs, were considered as use.

B(ii) If YES, please explain:

All replies indicated that use was valid as long as the registered mark was not substantively altered, meaning that its distinctive elements were not changed (in one reply, however, verbal marks were excluded). In one case specifically, the good faith of this type of use must be proved. In another, the distinctive elements of the mark (in the form in which it was registered) should be identified, likewise the variant.

B(iii) If YES, please explain:

The vast majority considered this as genuine use of the mark (same as use in national territory) and, in many cases, that this type of use could serve as evidence of use and, therefore, guarantee the validity of the registration. One reply, however, stated that this type of use was only valid on its territory if the products containing the mark were exported to specific countries.

D. If YES, please explain:

Most replies stated that the use/non-use period started either from the filing date of an application for registration or from the expiry date of an opposition procedure.

E. If YES, please explain:

For most respondents, non-use might be excused in case of unforeseen circumstances, force majeure, which prevented the holder from using his mark, i.e., import/export restrictions, natural disasters, etc. In one reply, court must accept the excuses given by the party concerned in order to be considered as valid.

H. If YES, please explain which are the sanctions:

In most cases, if the mark was not used within the time-limit set out in the domestic laws/practice, the registration was either removed from the register, cancelled, revoked or it simply lapsed. According to some replies, cancellation/invalidity might be requested by third parties.

4A. If YES, please explain:

In many replies, reference was made to pharmaceutical and pharmaceutical related products. In one reply it was indicated that the legislation on tobacco control provided special requirements regarding the use of marks on tobacco products.

6. Which law applies for cases of false or deceptive use of marking symbols? Please identify:

Most of the replies indicated their national Trade Mark Law/Act as the applied legislation. The second most indicated legislation was that on Unfair Competition, followed by Commercial, Civil, Penal and Criminal Laws. A small amount indicated that there was no such type of legislation in their territories (or at least not yet).

7. If YES, please explain:

One reply explained that, in case of non-use of marking symbols when required by law, a fine would be charged. In case of continuing offence, an additional fine would be charged on a daily basis.

8. Who is responsible for the control of marking requirements: the IP office, another government body or a private sector institution?

For the majority, governmental authorities such as the Ministry of Commerce were responsible for the control of marking requirements. Some others informed, however, that administrative authorities, such as national Industrial Property offices were the ones responsible for the said control.

A. Please explain the nature of cancellation and/or invalidation procedures in your country:

About half of the responses indicated cancellation and invalidation as proceedings to be carried out at judicial level, although in some cases the initial procedures must happen before the offices. According to some legislations, cancellation/removal might be based, for example, on lack of use or failure to renew the registration.

C(i) If YES, what are the standing requirements?

The vast majority listed the following: non-renewal, non-use (no fulfillment of use requirements), non-compliance with local provisions, invalidation, the mark had become an unregistrable mark, cancellation following an opposition. Also any person with legal and legitimate interest might file a revocation (cancellation) action with a statement of the grounds upon which the said action was based, and proceed with the payment of the prescribed fees.

E. If YES, when does the period start and what is the duration of the period?

The majority indicated that if a mark was not genuinely used within a period of five years from registration date (or from the date of issue of the certificate), it could be cancelled/invalidated. A smaller group also indicated the five-year period, but from the date of publication of the registration. The third most indicated period was that of three years from registration date. A few others went on to explain that, if no oppositions were filed, the period would be of five years from the date where the opposition period expired, or, in case an opposition was filed, five years from the date of the final decision.

F. If YES, what are the standing requirements?

Some replies indicated as grounds for these actions relative and/or absolute grounds for refusal. Some indicated that the requirements should be the same as those before the national office.

G. Please explain:

Most replies indicated that the dissatisfied party might appeal against a court decision, or a decision from the trademark office, before the court of the next instance - second or third. In this case, most replies cited the Supreme Court and the Court (or Board) of Appeal as a higher instance, but other types of courts were also mentioned, i.e. the High Court and the Federal Tribunal. One reply in particular said that an appeal must be presented before the instance that issued the final decision.

H. If YES, give time period restriction:

Many of the replies indicated a period of 15 days during which appeal procedures might be brought. Other replies mentioned the period of five to 90 days from the notification of the decision or two months from the publication of the decision. Some replies stated that in case that an interested party had acquiesced for five years with the use of the mark by a third party, he/she could no longer object to the use or invoke the nullity of the later application of that mark (unless in case of bad faith).

I. If YES, please explain how:

The majority of the replies answering “yes” indicated that, in case a mark was registered and effectively used for a period of at least five years (in one case, three years), counted from the date of its publication or registration, and provided that the application was made in good faith and in accordance with all national requirements, its use should not be contested (i.e., in a claim of priority use). In one reply specifically, an affidavit stating that the mark had been in continuous use in commerce for the period of five years, must be presented within one year after this period.

I. Other:

The following grounds for removal, among others, were given: all relative and/or absolute grounds, conflict with official signs, non-distinctiveness of the mark, conflict with the denomination of a plant variety or notorious mark, a mark created in bad faith or a mark that had become the common name in trade for the product for which it was registered, copyright violation, conflict with an earlier right to a name and registration obtained by fraud or other unlawful means.

3A. If YES, please explain:

One reply indicated that, once a final and conclusive decision was rendered, the owner (or, in some cases, a third party as well) was prohibited to present a new trademark application. Once a mark ceased to have effect, the period of prohibition to use or to apply the same mark again varied between one to 10 years.

4. If YES, please explain:

Almost all of the respondents indicated the need for the filing of a formal request for renewal and, among the responses obtained, only in one reply it was indicated that the renewal request would be examined as if it were a new application.

5. How long is the period after expiration of registration during which renewal can still be made?

Almost universally the period after expiration during which renewal can still be made was indicated as six months.

6. If YES, what are the consequences if the IP office has failed to inform the holder?

Where replies were given to this question, virtually all indicated that there would not be any consequences arising from a failure on the part of the office to contact the holder when the registration was due for renewal.

7A. If YES, please explain:

Approximately one third of the responses confirmed that there existed limited provisions for restitutio in integrum.

7B. If YES, please explain:

A small number of responses indicated that no intervening rights through registration might be obtained.

7C. If YES, please explain:

Of those who responded positively to question 7A, about half indicated that good faith use of the mark in the interim period was protected.

8. If YES, please explain:

There was quite a wide divergence in the periods of time indicated during which third parties might be prevented from applying to register the same mark. The periods varied from the six-month grace period (in many cases) to 8 years (in a single case). However, the most common period indicated was one year from non-renewal.

1. If YES, please explain:

Almost without exception, the respondents confirmed that changes might be made to a registration. The scope of such changes varied, but by and large, the permissible changes included transfer of rights, changes in name or address of applicant, holder or representative, change of representative, limitation of goods and services, division, recording of restrictions, recording of licences and levy of execution – in other words, changes essential to the legal status of the trademark. On the other hand, the strong consensus among the respondents was that changes involving the mark itself could only be effected in very limited and exceptional circumstances and, in general, the specification of goods and services could not be extended.

2. If YES, please explain:

Only two respondents replied in the affirmative to this question, one of them stating that the changes must occur during the term of the trademark right.

3. What are the effects of a change in the register?

Where this question was responded to, it was in general to the effect that the changes required recording and publishing and that the changes entered into force after the date of such recording. In a certain number of responses, it was also stated that, depending upon the nature of the change, there might be a possibility of third party opposition to the change within a given period of time after publication.

1. Among others was mentioned rejection of an application and, in one special case, revocation of acceptance (one month to request a hearing from notification that the acceptance would otherwise be revoked). Some replies indicated time limits for statements in a two party procedure. Also, the opportunity to make observations in opposition or cancellation proceedings were indicated as well as remedy of deficiencies in other proceedings before the office, such as change in ownership etc. However, the majority stated that laws prescribed all the time limits.

5. If YES, what are the requirements for reinstatement of rights?

Where respondents replied to this question, it was indicated that the party to the proceedings would be required to justify the failure to observe the time limit in question – generally, force majeure or other impediment independent of the applicant or representative - and prove that all due care had been exercised.
